

LEARNING ON SCREEN AWARDS JURY COMMENTS

Courseware and Curriculum Non-Broadcast

Nominations

A World Without Maths: What is Division?

This endearing animated film was part of a series, aimed at introducing students to multiplication and division for the first time. Judges praised its colourful animation style and the use of familiar situations for young children to relate to.

I Can't Go To School Today

This poignant animation tells the stories of five children struggling with chronic illness, living markedly different lives to their peers. Following the children through their treatments, we see their bravery and resilience, as they stay positive in the face of life-threatening conditions. Judges described this film as touching and beautifully animated. It was praised for the strength of character exhibited by the children and the use of voiceovers from the children themselves.

Shia // Sunni

This short drama was produced to help students understand the main differences between the Shia and Sunni branches of Islam. The judges praised the acting, use of humour and beautifully recorded sound, commenting that the film would be useful in prompting debate in an education setting.

The Good Viva Video

This resource was produced to support doctoral students through the viva process and follows a fictional character as she prepares for her viva. The video is interspersed with commentary from experienced examiners and supervisors providing additional guidance. The judges felt this was a well-packaged resource with really useful, practical advice that would guide any PhD student preparing for their viva.

Winner

The Good Viva Video

A highly informative production, which stood out for its practical application to PhD students.